SCENES IN NEW ORLEANS.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.] An hour or two passed at the office of the Recorder of Deaths developed several s range sights. The office is on the ground floor of the St. Louis II, tel, corner of Royal and St. Louis streets. While sitting there one of the charity wagons drove ip, containing two dead bodies, in rough, npainted pine coffins, drave up for a burpermit. One containing a woman was piled upon the top of the other, and surcounting the ghastly heap sat a faithful dog and the woman's husband, who accompanied her to potter's field to note the spot Davis' Mississippi Brigade, and Rev. Complications sometimes arise requiring special remedies; but as a rule our most successful physician give little medicine. They watch the patient closely, and see that a competent nurse is always at the bedside. It is unfortunately true that thousands cannot have the the requisite care, and that thousands more from gnorance, bring on fatal results by their imprudence. The yealow fever will occaonally invade this country, in spite of all quarantine regulations; and one of the best means of conquering its terrors and of resisting its ravages is for doctors and people to familiarize themselves with its character and treatment. With prudence on the part of the patients and their friends, with judicious medical attention, and with good nursing, not one in twenty would die.
